The Company continues to explore various short term financing alternatives to secure near term working capital.

IRON ORE MARKET

Similar to recent years, the iron ore market has been volatile in 2023. The price has ranged between US$103 and US$130 per tonne (62% Fe Sinter Fines CFR China) during the first three quarters of the year, averaging US$118 per tonne. In November, the price has risen to US$128 per tonne, contrary to consensus opinion that the market would be weak in the latter half of the year. The volatility appears to be a reaction to conflicting policy measures in China, which dominates global steel production and the sea-borne iron ore trade. On the one hand China's steel mills have been ordered to cut back production in the second half of the year to meet a government mandate to cap 2023 output at the 2022 level in an attempt to limit carbon emissions. On the other hand, China's State Council has issued measures to restore and expand consumption in the steel-intensive automobile and real estate sectors, aiming to expand the role of consumption in economic development.

For these reasons, combined with the continued interruption in supply from Ukraine and limited supply growth elsewhere, many analysts now believe the iron ore market will remain strong for the balance of 2023 and into 2024.
